

ABSTRACT

A silencer for a ventilation system, for example a gas turbine air intake system, includes first and second body sections spaced from each other to define a gas flow path therebetween. Methods of attenuating noise from a gas turbine air intake includes directing air from a dirty air plenum of a gas turbine air intake system through an air flow path defined by first and second body sections.